Black Friday Launch Engine: 60-Minute Script

Oct 1, 2026 · @Ramya Rednam

Word-for-word script for the AI Profits Mastermind session: 60 minutes of teaching, then 15 minutes of Q&A. [CLICK] means next slide. Times are cumulative.

Run of show

29 slides: 60 minutes of teaching, then 15 minutes of Q&A. If you run late, trim slides 15 and 25 first; they're the easiest to say in one line.

Slide	Title	Starts at	Length
1	Cover	0:00	1:00
2	Five questions	1:00	1:00
3	The shift	2:00	1:30
4	Small list, big month	3:30	1:30
5	The six-week runway	5:00	3:00
6	Why October	8:00	2:30
7	October's job: the waitlist	10:30	2:30
8	Three buckets	13:00	2:00
9	Low ticket vs high ticket	15:00	2:30
10	The low-ticket play	17:30	2:00
11	The high-ticket play	19:30	2:00
12	If you sell both	21:30	1:30
13	Pick one deal	23:00	1:30
14	Add value, don't cut price	24:30	1:30
15	Proof: keep it simple	26:00	1:30
16	The profit ladder	27:30	2:30
17	Cyber Monday + real scarcity	30:00	1:30

Slide	Title	Starts at	Length
18	Your offer in one sentence	31:30	1:30
19	October vs November	33:00	3:00
20	The 10-email arc	36:00	3:30
21	Sell without sounding salesy	39:30	2:30
22	Five pages	42:00	2:30
23	Ads: works vs burns	44:30	3:00
24	Channel plan	47:30	2:30
25	Small team? Pick three	50:00	2:00
26	Before, during, after	52:00	3:00
27	The whole engine	55:00	2:30
28	Next week with Sabrina	57:30	2:30
29	Questions	60:00	15:00

Part 1 · Opening (0:00–5:00)

Slide 1 · Cover (0:00)

Hi everyone, welcome. I'm Ramya. I've spent years building funnels, launches and email campaigns, and Black Friday is the one launch every year where all of it gets tested at once.

Here's how today works. I'm going to teach straight through for about an hour. Please drop your questions in the chat as we go, and I'll answer them all in the last fifteen minutes. That way we actually finish.

And next week, Sabrina takes everything we cover today and builds it with you, using AI. So today is the strategy. Next week is the build.

[CLICK]

Slide 2 · Five questions (1:00)

Every Black Friday that works answers five questions.

When do you start? What's the offer? What do you say? Where do you say it? And how do you deliver?

Miss one, and the launch leaks money. A great offer with no runway flops. A great runway with a confusing offer flops. A great offer and a great runway with a broken checkout? That one hurts the most.

So we'll go through all five, in that order.

[CLICK]

Slide 3 · The shift (2:00)

First, I want to change how you think about Black Friday.

Black Friday isn't a sale. It's a launch with a deadline everyone already believes.

Think about that. Normally, when you launch something, you have to convince people why they should buy now. On Black Friday, you don't. The whole world has already told your audience: this week, you buy. The urgency is done for you.

So your job isn't to be the cheapest. You will never win a price war against Amazon. Your job is to be the easiest yes in their inbox. The most obviously good decision they can make this week.

That's the whole mindset. Not "how much can I discount?" but "how do I make this a no-brainer?"

[CLICK]

Slide 4 · Small list, big month (3:30)

Now, I know what some of you are thinking. "Ramya, I don't have a huge list. Black Friday is for big brands."

Let's do the math.

Ten clients at three thousand dollars is thirty thousand dollars. A hundred buyers at two ninety-seven is almost thirty thousand dollars.

You don't need a giant list for either of those. You need a few thousand people who already know you, and the right offer for them.

So you don't need a big list. You need the right offer for the list you have. Everything today is built for founders, coaches and consultants. Not for huge e-commerce brands.

Let's start with timing.

[CLICK]

Part 2 · When to start (5:00–13:00)

Slide 5 · The six-week runway (5:00)

Here's the biggest mistake I see. People start their Black Friday campaign in Black Friday week. They send one email on Friday morning, maybe post twice, and then wonder why nothing happened.

Black Friday week is the harvest. October is the planting.

So here's your runway. Six phases.

Phase one, the warm-up: October 15th to November 1st. You're putting out value. Your best content. A free training. Stories. And no discount, nothing about a sale. You're just reminding people why they follow you.

Phase two, the waitlist: November 2nd to the 15th. Now you open a simple page that says, "Something is coming. Once a year. Join the waitlist and you get first access." That's it.

Phase three, early access: November 16th to the 22nd. Your waitlist gets the offer first, before anyone else. And this is where a lot of your sales actually happen, because these are your warmest people.

Phase four is Black Friday week. November 23rd to the 27th. Doors open to everyone. Black Friday itself is Friday the 27th.

Phase five, the weekend and Cyber Monday: the 28th to the 30th. Your Black Friday offer closes on Sunday night. And on Monday, you open something new. We'll talk about what in a bit.

And phase six, December 1st and 2nd: final hours, then onboarding. Getting your new buyers started.

So you can see, the part everyone thinks of as "Black Friday" is really phases four and five. Phases one to three are what make them work.

[CLICK]

Slide 6 · Why October (8:00)

So why mid-October? Why not just start in November?

Because attention is cheap in October and expensive in November. Here are the numbers.

In Black Friday week, Meta ad costs, the cost to reach a thousand people, run about 50 to 80 percent higher than normal. Everyone is bidding for the same eyeballs. So if you're paying to reach strangers that week, you're buying the most expensive attention of the entire year.

Second number: people who already know you, your warm audience, convert two to five times better than cold audiences. So the smart move is to spend October building that warm audience, and spend November selling to it.

And third: ad platforms need time to learn. The guidance is to start your Q4 prep eight to ten weeks before the peak. That's why we start now, not in November.

Even if you never run a single ad, the logic is exactly the same. Buy attention in October. Sell to it in November. If you don't run ads, your "attention" is your content and your list. Same principle.

[CLICK]

Slide 7 · October's job: the waitlist (10:30)

So what's the one thing you need to finish by mid-November? The waitlist.

Nobody should hear about your offer for the first time on Black Friday. If that's the first time they hear about it, you've already lost them. They're getting fifty other emails that day.

So here's how you build it.

One, free value. Run a free training, a workshop, a guide. Something genuinely useful. And at the end, you say: "I'm opening something special for Black Friday. Join the waitlist if you want first access."

Two, personal DMs. This is the one founders skip, and it's the one that works best. Message your past clients yourself. Not a broadcast. A real message. "Hey, I've got something coming for Black Friday. You'd be one of the first people I'd want in. Want early access?"

Three, the waitlist page. It's live by November 2nd. One promise, the date it opens, and one field to sign up. That's all it needs.

And four, your number. You need to know how many people you need on that list by November 15th. I'll show you how to work that out at the end.

That's October. Plant the seeds, build the list. Now let's talk about what you're actually going to sell.

[CLICK]

Part 3 · Offer framing (13:00–33:00)

Slide 8 · Three buckets (13:00)

Before you decide what to sell, you need to know who you're selling to. And here's the thing: your audience isn't one group. It's three.

Bucket one: people who've never bought from you. Followers, subscribers, people who watch your stuff. They like you, but they haven't trusted you with money yet. They need an entry offer. Something low risk with a clear outcome.

Bucket two: people who bought once. A past client, someone who bought a course two years ago. They need a comeback offer. The next step after what they already bought, and a thank-you for coming back.

Bucket three: your current clients. People working with you right now. They need an upgrade. A longer term, a higher tier, extra support.

And this is where most founders get it wrong. They only pitch bucket one, strangers. But your easiest sale is to someone who already paid you. They already trust you. They already know your stuff works.

So each bucket gets its own offer and its own email. Don't send the same thing to everyone.

[CLICK]

Slide 9 · Low ticket vs high ticket (15:00)

Now, I know this room has a real mix. Some of you sell a forty-seven dollar prompt pack. Some of you sell five-thousand-dollar consulting. So let's be really clear. Black Friday works differently for each.

Low ticket sells on the deal. High ticket sells on the decision.

Look at the table. Low ticket is anything under roughly five hundred dollars. Courses, templates, workshops, memberships. The price move is a discount, a bundle, or buy-one-get-one. The window is short, twenty-four to seventy-two hours, open to everyone. People buy with one click. And the scarcity is simple: the price ends Sunday.

High ticket is two thousand and up. Coaching, masterminds, done-for-you. And it's completely different. You don't cut the price. You add bonuses, extra access, or a payment plan. You offer it to past clients and warm leads first, through early access. People buy through an application, a call, or a deposit. And the scarcity is real: you can only take so many clients.

The last row is the one to remember. Low ticket fills the room. High ticket pays the bills.

[CLICK]

Slide 10 · The low-ticket play (17:30)

So if you're selling low ticket, here's the play.

Make the yes so easy it takes under five minutes.

The deal: a discount, a bundle, or buy one get one. Pick one. Keep it obvious.

The window: forty-eight to seventy-two hours. Short and loud. Long sales get ignored.

The path: email, to page, to checkout. That's it. And at checkout, one small add-on, twenty-seven to forty-seven dollars. A template, a bonus video, something that adds to what they just bought.

And here's the real goal. The revenue is nice. But what you're really building is a list of new buyers. Because every one of those people is now someone you can invite to your bigger offer in December. A buyer is worth ten times a follower.

[CLICK]

Slide 11 · The high-ticket play (19:30)

Now the high-ticket play. This one is different.

High ticket closes in conversations, not on sales pages.

Who do you sell to? Past clients and engaged leads. People who've replied to your emails, booked calls before, commented on your posts. And you DM them yourself.

The offer: your price stays. You don't discount a three-thousand-dollar program. Instead you add something. A bonus strategy call. A payment plan. Or my favourite for Black Friday: "Lock in this year's price and start in January." That one works because nobody wants to start something big in December anyway.

The path: early access, then a short call, then a deposit.

And the scarcity is honest. "I'm taking five new clients for January." That's real, because you're the one doing the work.

[CLICK]

Slide 12 · If you sell both (21:30)

A lot of you sell both. So how do you run both without confusing everyone?

Low ticket on Black Friday. High ticket to the people who just said yes.

Track one: your low-ticket offer is the public Black Friday sale. Open to everyone. That's your volume.

Track two: your high-ticket offer is private. Invite only, early access, past clients and hot leads. Closed on a call.

And then December. Everyone who bought your low-ticket offer gets a personal invitation to your high-ticket one, with a January start.

The one rule: never put your ninety-seven-dollar course and your three-thousand-dollar program in the same email with the same discount. It cheapens the big one.

[CLICK]

Slide 13 · Pick one deal (23:00)

So what kind of deal do you run? Here are your options.

If they need to think about the deal, it's the wrong deal.

Price cut: best for low ticket. But watch out, it trains people to wait for sales.

Bonus stack: best for coaching and high ticket. Just make sure the bonuses are quick for you to deliver.

Longer term: great for memberships. Twelve months instead of three.

Bundle: if you have three or more products, put them together around one outcome.

Payment plan: for high ticket. Same full price, easier first step.

And buy-one-gift-one: perfect for programs and communities, and amazing for Cyber Monday.

Pick one. Not five. One deal they understand in five seconds.

[CLICK]

Slide 14 · Add value, don't cut price (24:30)

If you remember one thing from the offer section, remember this.

Protect the price. Stack the value.

Alex Hormozi has this great example. "Buy one, get two free" and "thirty percent off three" are basically the same maths. But the first one sells so much better, because free feels bigger than a percentage.

So instead of saying "my two-thousand-dollar program, now fifty percent off", say "my two-thousand-dollar program, plus three private calls, plus my AI toolkit, this week only."

Same value to them. But you've kept your price. And your best clients don't learn to wait for November.

[CLICK]

Slide 15 · Proof: keep it simple (26:00)

And you don't need to create anything new.

Simple beats clever. Bundle what you already own.

Amy Porterfield did this one Black Friday. Buy one of her courses, get a second one free. No new product. Forty-eight hours. Four emails. And she hit a hundred and forty percent of her goal.

Her test for every promo was: "Is this simple but sexy?" I love that. If it's complicated, it won't sell.

[CLICK]

Slide 16 · The profit ladder (27:30)

Now let's talk about how one sale becomes several.

The front end pays for the ads. The ladder pays you.

Here's an example for a coach. The front end is a six-month program at fifteen hundred, normally two thousand. That's what gets people in.

At checkout, there's an order bump. A tick box. "Add my AI prompt templates for forty-seven dollars." Lots of people tick it.

Right after they pay, the upsell. One click. "Add three private calls for five hundred."

If they say no, the downsell. "How about one VIP call for one ninety-seven?"

On Cyber Monday, a cross-sell. A related course, two for one.

And in December, you invite your best buyers to the next level. Your mastermind, your five-thousand-dollar offer.

One creator made twenty thousand dollars on Black Friday, and forty-one hundred of that came just from bumps and upsells. That's money most people leave on the table.

You build the ladder once. Every buyer gets to choose how far up they go.

[CLICK]

Slide 17 · Cyber Monday + real scarcity (30:00)

Two quick things.

First, Cyber Monday is a second launch, not a rerun. Last year, Cyber Monday was the biggest online shopping day of the entire year in the US. So don't just repeat Friday. Make Monday news. A different product, a two-for-one, or a gift version for the holidays.

Second, scarcity has to be real. Real looks like this: seat limits you can explain, bonuses that expire, a price that goes up next year. Fake looks like this: countdown timers that reset, "last chance" five times. Never do that. Fake urgency gets you one sale and loses you the client forever.

[CLICK]

Slide 18 · Your offer in one sentence (31:30)

And finally, your offer has to fit in one sentence.

If you can't say it in one sentence, they won't buy it.

Here's the formula. For [who] who want [outcome] in [time]: [product]. This Black Friday only, [deal] plus [bonus]. [Real limit]. Ends [date].

Here's what that sounds like. "For coaches who want a business that runs without them in six months: the Scale Program. Fifteen hundred, normally two thousand, plus three private calls. Fifty seats, because I coach every call. Ends Sunday, November 29th."

You'll write yours in next week's session with Sabrina. For now, just keep the formula in your head.

[CLICK]

Part 4 · Content (33:00–42:00)

Slide 19 · October vs November (33:00)

Okay. You've got your timing and you've got your offer. Now, what do you actually say?

October earns the right to sell in November.

In October, your content is value and emotion. No discount, no mention of a sale. Things like: "Three mistakes keeping you stuck at ten thousand a month." A client story told as a carousel. A free live training that ends with "join the waitlist." You're reminding people why they trust you.

Then in November, it switches to proof, then offer. Client wins with real names and real numbers. A video of you saying, "Here's why I only open this once a year." And in the final forty-eight hours, countdown Stories.

The switch happens the moment your waitlist opens. Before that, give. After that, every single piece of content carries proof and points to the offer.

And here's why this matters. If the first thing people see from you in two months is "fifty percent off," you look desperate. If they've seen a month of genuinely useful content from you, the offer feels like the obvious next step.

[Show the screenshot on the slide and talk through it in one or two lines.]

[CLICK]

Slide 20 · The 10-email arc (36:00)

Now, email. This is where most of your money will actually come from.

Here's a number that changes how you think about launches. Forty to sixty percent of launch sales land on the last day. Sometimes more.

So the biggest mistake? Going quiet at the end because you feel like you're "emailing too much." You're not. That's exactly when people decide.

Here's the arc. Ten emails, November 16th to December 1st.

Email one, November 16th: early access, just for your waitlist.

Email two, the 18th: "You're one of fifty." Remind them it's limited.

Email three, the 20th: a client story. Proof.

Email four, the 23rd: doors open to everyone.

Email five, the 25th: future self. "Imagine it's March and you've already done this."

Email six, Black Friday: forty-eight hours left.

Email seven: twenty-four hours.

Email eight: last call.

Email nine, Cyber Monday: the new offer.

And email ten, December 1st: final hours.

On the final day, you can email three or four times. Keep those last emails short, a hundred to a hundred and fifty words. Mention the bonus in every single one. In one study of launch affiliates, the top performers sent more than twice as many emails in the last forty-eight hours as everyone else, and their closing emails were shorter.

And if you have WhatsApp or SMS, send a short message the same day as each email.

[CLICK]

Slide 21 · Sell without sounding salesy (39:30)

I know some of you are thinking, "Ramya, ten emails? I'll sound so salesy."

Here's how you don't.

A reason why makes a discount believable.

One: give a reason why. "I only open this once a year, because I coach every call myself." When there's a real reason, the deal doesn't feel cheap. It feels generous.

Two: say thank you. Especially to past clients. "You've been with me, so you get first access and my best price." That's not a pitch. That's a thank-you.

Three: outcome first. Lead with what their life looks like after. The price goes in paragraph two, never in the subject line.

And four: text, don't shout. Write like you're texting a client. "Quick yes or no?" works way better than "HUGE SALE!!!" with three exclamation marks.

And one bonus: give people an easy way out. "If now's not the right time, no stress at all." People trust you more when you're not desperate. And people buy from people they trust.

[CLICK]

Part 5 · Pages, ads, channels (42:00–52:00)

Slide 22 · Five pages (42:00)

Let's talk about where people actually buy. You need five pages. That's it.

Every page has one job and one button.

One, the waitlist page. One screen. What's coming, the date, one field to sign up.

Two, the sales page. The outcome at the top, the offer box, proof, and FAQs. And the offer box shows up twice, once near the top for people who are ready, and once at the bottom for people who needed convincing.

Three, checkout. Short form, a payment plan option, and that one add-on we talked about.

Four, the upsell page. One offer, one click, and a clear "no thanks" button. Don't trap people.

Five, the thank-you page. This one matters more than you think. Tell them their first step today and when the welcome call is. People who start straight away don't ask for refunds.

And one more number. Last year, fifty-seven percent of Cyber Monday sales in the US happened on a phone. So build every page for mobile first, and click every link on your phone before you launch.

[CLICK]

Slide 23 · Ads: works vs burns (44:30)

Now ads. If you're not running ads, stay with me, because this logic applies to your content too.

Prospect early. Retarget late. Never pay to learn in Black Friday week.

Here's what works. In October, you run a no-discount video of you, talking to camera, to cold audiences. You're just building awareness and getting people to watch. Then you run lead ads to fill your waitlist. Then in Black Friday week, you only show ads to warm audiences. People who watched your videos, visited your site, or are on your list. And you refresh your creative every five to seven days, because people get tired of seeing the same ad fast that week.

Here's what burns money. Running cold ads in Black Friday week, when prices are at their peak. Generic "fifty percent off!!!" graphics that look like every other brand. Launching brand-new ads on the day, when the platform has no data on them yet. And sending cold traffic straight to a three-thousand-dollar checkout. Nobody buys high ticket from a stranger's ad.

And one thing that consistently works: ads that look personal. You, on your phone, talking. Or a client talking about their result. Those almost always beat polished, designed ads.

[Show the screenshot on the slide and talk through it in one or two lines.]

[CLICK]

Slide 24 · Channel plan (47:30)

So how do all the channels work together?

One message. Every channel. Same day.

Read this table left to right. In October, email is your newsletter, social is value posts, you run a free live training, you recruit any partners, and ads go to cold audiences with no discount.

During the waitlist phase, email invites people to the waitlist, social teases it, and ads become lead ads.

In Black Friday week, email goes out daily, WhatsApp goes out at the same time as email, social shows proof and countdowns, you might do a doors-open live, and ads only go to warm people.

And at Cyber Monday and the close, everything points to the new offer and the deadline.

The thing that matters here: the same message on the same day everywhere. If your email says "doors open today" and your Instagram is still posting a random tip, you lose momentum. And brands that added SMS to their email saw around twenty percent more Black Friday revenue than the year before. So if you have WhatsApp or SMS, use it.

[CLICK]

Slide 25 · Small team? Pick three (50:00)

Now, I can see some of you looking at that table thinking, "I'm one person."

Three channels done every day beat seven done badly.

So pick three.

Email. Non-negotiable. It's where the sale closes.

One social platform. Where your buyers already are. If you sell to businesses, that's probably LinkedIn. If you're a coach, probably Instagram. Pick one and show up every day.

And DMs or WhatsApp. Especially if you sell high ticket. That's where it actually closes.

And only add paid ads if you started them in October. Don't start in November and hope.

You're a founder, not a media company. Do three things well.

[CLICK]

Part 6 · Delivery and close (52:00–60:00)

Slide 26 · Before, during, after (52:00)

Last part. Delivery. Because you can do everything right and still lose money in the last mile.

The sale isn't the finish line. It's lesson one.

Before you launch: test every link, every page, and the full checkout, on your phone. Do a real test payment. And have every email written and approved at least twenty-four hours before it goes out. Do this twice: once before early access on November 14th, and once before doors open on the 22nd. A broken checkout link on Black Friday is the most expensive mistake you can make.

During the launch: make sure someone is answering emails and DMs all weekend. And here's the thing, every reply or DM you get that week is a buying signal. "Does this work for someone like me?" means "I want to buy, help me say yes." Answer fast.

And after: your confirmation email isn't a receipt. It's lesson one. Welcome them, give them their first step, and tell them when the welcome call is. Get them a quick win in the first seventy-two hours. People who start don't ask for refunds.

Then December. Most people keep buying after Black Friday, so plan your follow-ups now. If someone bought X and not Y, offer them Y. If someone bought your low-ticket offer, invite them to a call about your high-ticket one.

[Show the screenshot on the slide and talk through it in one or two lines.]

[CLICK]

Slide 27 · The whole engine (55:00)

So let's put the whole thing together on one slide.

Plant in October. Open to the waitlist. Close loud. Onboard. Ascend.

October: warm up. Give value, build your audience, no discount.

Early November: the waitlist. Get people to raise their hand.

November 16th: early access. Your warmest people buy first.

November 23rd: open doors to everyone, and close loud through Black Friday.

November 30th: Cyber Monday. A new offer, not a rerun.

And December: onboard your buyers and invite them to the next level.

One offer per bucket. Low ticket for volume. High ticket through conversations.

If you do just this, you're already ahead of ninety percent of people who'll send one "fifty percent off" email on Friday morning.

[CLICK]

Slide 28 · Next week with Sabrina (57:30)

Now, next week, Sabrina's going to build all of this with you using AI. And to get the most out of that session, I want you to bring four things.

Know your number before you write a single email.

One: your buckets. Roughly how many people have never bought from you, how many bought once, and how many are current clients.

Two: your track. Are you selling low ticket, high ticket, or both?

Three: your deal. One deal type, and your real limit. How many seats, how many spots, when it ends.

And four: your number. Here's the maths. Your revenue goal divided by your price gives you the number of sales you need. Then divide that by your conversion rate, and that's how many people you need on your waitlist.

So if your goal is thirty thousand dollars, and your offer is fifteen hundred, you need twenty sales. If five percent of your waitlist usually buys, and please use your own number from past launches, you need four hundred people on that waitlist by November 15th.

And if that number is way bigger than your list right now? Great. Now you know exactly what October is for.

Bring those four things, and next week you'll walk out with your whole campaign built.

[CLICK]

Slide 29 · Questions (60:00)

Okay. That's the strategy. Let's go to your questions. I'll take the most common ones first.

Q&A (60:00–75:00)

How to run it: take the questions from the chat and group them by theme (timing, offer, ads, delivery). Answer the most-asked first, in 60 to 90 seconds each. Anything about writing specific copy or building pages: "Great one. Bring that to Sabrina's session next week, that's exactly what she'll build with you." At 74:00, close with: "Thank you all. Go build your waitlist. See you next week with Sabrina."

Likely questions, with short answers:

1. "It's already October. Am I too late?" No. Start the warm-up this week, and open the waitlist on November 2nd. If you're really behind, skip straight to the waitlist and DM your past clients. That's still enough.
2. "My list is tiny, like 300 people." Then go high ticket and go personal. Three hundred warm people can be five clients at three thousand. DM them one by one.
3. "Won't discounting hurt my brand?" Only if you discount the high-ticket offer. Low ticket can take a discount once a year. High ticket gets bonuses, not a lower price.
4. "Should I discount for current clients too?" Don't give them the same public deal. Give them an upgrade or a thank-you offer first, before anyone else.
5. "What if nobody joins my waitlist?" Then your October content didn't land, or you didn't ask. Ask directly, in emails, posts and DMs. "Want first access? Reply yes." Replies count as waitlist sign-ups too.

6. "Do I need ads?" No. Ads amplify a working campaign; they don't fix a broken one. If you didn't start them in October, skip them and focus on email, one social channel and DMs.
7. "How many emails is too many?" On a launch, people who aren't interested unsubscribe, and that's fine. Give people an easy way to opt out of just this promo, and keep sending to everyone else.
8. "What should my Cyber Monday offer be?" Something different from Friday: a related product, a two-for-one, or a gift version. Never just the same offer again.
9. "What if I don't have a second product for the ladder?" Use a call. A bonus strategy call or a 1:1 session is the easiest upsell for any coach or consultant.
10. "When do I stop selling?" When your deadline says so. If you say Sunday midnight, close Sunday midnight. Keeping your word is what makes next year's Black Friday work.